They were choreographed by the theatre's dance master,. Located well to the west of the City boundary, the theatre was unaffected by the , which raged through the City in September 1666, but it burned down six years later on 25 January 1672. The worst is yet conceal'd; Then wherefore, eager for my own destruction? Hill, stated that while the directors of the company did not wish to take 'a merely mercenary view' of the question, it was nevertheless 'quite impossible, in fairness to the shareholders, to continue to let the Opera House at a rental which was admittedly only a fraction of its true normal value'.
