There is no political organization of women, community groups are weak and operate in various areas slightly related to their gender role. The Sakha Republic lacks most elementary understanding of gender issues, even in the top levels of state authority. The ethnic and demographic parameters have been identified statistically; the research sketches average portraits of the main social groups of women of all main ethnic groups of the Sakha Republic, including the native.

The main sources of the original data in the research were content analysis of the local press, narrow-focused interviews with experts, and especially a survey with questionnaires sent to women in their places of residence, that has covered nearly eight hundred women selected by a specially identified sampling technique. Women are being discriminated in employment and career development, and this is deeply set in the commonplace mentality of both men and women.
