Children should be encouraged to send notes at every stage of their development -- from scribbles to sentences. A post shared by oliverjeffers on Mar 17, 2020 at 5:13am PDT Peter H.

Churches could transform inner cities. Here's how

By 1975, 41 percent of married mothers worked and that proportion reached 64 percent in 1992. For example, at the first presidential debate of 2020, there was not a single question to the two candidates as to how they would fix this problem of inner-city illiteracy and resulting human tragedy. We know that promoting family literacy is important to future reading and school success, but does that mean parents should be prepared to read 100 books a week to their preschoolers? A family's income is used to finance immediate needs and, if it is sufficient, may allow the Family to save for future needs.

The Future of Literacy Research in the Early Childhood Context

But districts must implement these new accountability systems while also planning for an eventual safe return to campus and without clarity about the duration of the health crisis. The consequences for children, especially, are not good.
