For it is far better to know something about everything than to know all about one thing. . To make light of philosophy is to be a true philosopher.

Pascal,

In every way, the influence of Montaigne was repugnant to the men of Port-Royal. Whereas in my present state, ignorant of what I am or of what I ought to do, I know neither my condition nor my duty. He does not reason, he insinuates, charms, and influences; or if he reasons, you must be prepared for his having some other design upon you than to convince you by his argument.
