Board of Directors

Up to 400 prisoners took over three wings of the prison, and held control of them for two days. This monument reproduced a Parisian fountain that was built in 1686 to celebrate the victories of Louis XIV. The resulting Woolf Report concluded that conditions in the prison had been intolerable, and recommended major reform of the prison system.

Possibly they were not 'angry' at all; often, indeed, they were admiring, devoted, exemplary in the relations of private life. One has only to skim those old forgotten novels and listen to the tone of voice in which they are written to divine that the writer was meeting criticism; she was saying this by way of aggression, or that by way of conciliation. According to local history, the original fountain was accidentally broken in 1785 by a Catalan fisherman who had climbed to the top of it so that he could have a better view of the Midsummer's Day festivities of Saint-Jean.
