The dangerous liberal ideas for censorship in the United States

The college's multipurpose buildings were typically among the largest construction projects in the colony, matched only by a major church or a capitol. University members generally indicated that they experienced academic freedom, but also stated that internet censorship, self-censorship, and other factors presented constraints. As shown here, about 10% of full-time workers are in low-wage jobs, about 30% don't have health insurance, and about 40% don't have pensions.
