Advanced Practice Psychiatric Nursing: the Need for a Blended Role

Four, just because CNS education in the past did not generally prepare these advanced practice nurses for the clinical management of acute and chronic illness or prescriptive authority, does not mean that it cannot and should not do so today and for tomorrow. Some jurisdictions require certification by a national professional body as one prerequisite for state authorization to practice as an advanced practice nurse. With health care system changes, such as the shifting and blurring boundaries between inpatient and outpatient care, changes were required in the graduate curricula to blend the CNS and NP roles into an advanced practice nurse APN role.

Transforming nursing, midwifery and health professions roles: advance nursing practice

This is particularly important in relation to the Scottish Government's Vision for Health and Social Care Integration and the need to ensure public value. The ANP must be able to initially and independently manage a broad range of presenting conditions. As part of this, job planning should be an explicit aspect of managing individuals and teams.

Transforming nursing, midwifery and health professions roles: advance nursing practice

This is a significant step forward for the increasing access and accessibility to qualified APRNs. It should be noted, however, that psychiatric CNSs have always been educated to manage acute and chronic mental illness. Mutual Recognition The APRN Compact addresses the need to promote consistent access to quality-advanced practice nursing care within states and across state lines.

History of APRN

We believe that master's prepared psychiatric-mental health CNSs have always provided and will continue to provide the full spectrum of mental health services.

Advanced Practice Psychiatric Nursing: the Need for a Blended Role

As a result, boards of nursing, via their 1995 Delegate Assembly, directed the NCSBN to collaborate with nurse practitioner specialty certification organizations to make significant progress toward legally defensible, psychometrically sound nurse practitioner examinations that are sufficient for regulatory purposes.

Advanced practice in pediatric nursing: blending roles

The NCSBN position also advocates that regulatory jurisdiction for APRNs be solely under boards of nursing, a master's degree be required as minimum educational preparation and prescriptive authority be granted as appropriate to the practice area.
