1963 March on Washington — Then and Now

At an elevation of 4061 feet it was 1039 feet higher and ten years later than the Snoqualmie Pass highway.

Washington then and now, 50 years after the assassination of Martin Luther King Jr.

The boy in the red shirt darted into the photo at the last second, giving it a little impromptu oomph.

1963 March on Washington — Then and Now

Notably, photographer Lee Pickett made his home here and for nearly forty years documented the life and work around him. The construction of a pipeline from the Cedar would have involved no insurmountable engineering obstacles. The modern photograph shows the current conditions at Fort Totten, including the area where the cannon was emplaced.
