His study was a room of only four tatami about eight square meters. Other researchers think that Motoori was not always a rigid rationalist and accepted the diversity of the interpretation of the texts. Next, to amend that evil was produced a kami called Kamunaobi no kami, and after it, Ōnaobi no kami.

But at the same time, this world also includes a plethora of strong and mighty kami with powers far surpassing those of human beings, and even kami-like humans cannot succeed at everything by their own capacities alone. Aside from his teachings, his poetry was especially notable, most of which were written in the sijo form with just three lines. If this first point is discussed in isolation from the others, it might even be used as evidence that Norinaga possessed a concept of an absolute deity.

It takes just 3 minutes to wear this, very simple for everyone! Norinaga took the view that the heritage of ancient Japan was one of natural spontaneity in feelings and spirit, and that imported Confucianism ran counter to such natural feelings. He traveled frequently to Kyoto to give lectures. At the age of 27, he bought several books by and embarked on his Kokugaku researches.

As I noted at the end of section 4, Norinaga inclined toward a train of thought within which virtually everything in this world had been determined through the design of Musubi no kami. Thus higher education, which had been the sole prerogative of samurai and Buddhist priests, was made available to middle and upper-class townsmen in the eighteenth century. According to Confucius, love, peace, and brotherhood in every walk of life are important aspects to bear in mind for humans to live a happy and prosperous life.
