Adult Learning Theories and Principles

A study published in 2013 sampled 125 addiction programs in the United States with respect to the extent and nature of parenting skills interventions offered. One of the biggest dangers of carrying chronic feelings of anger toward a parent lies not simply in what it does to the relationship between us and our parents, but how it might affect our relationships with an intimate partner or our children.

Adult Learning Theories and Principles

The ability of alternative caregivers to cope adequately and to avoid depression will affect the child indirectly through caregiving processes. It should be emphasized that these screens are just that, screens--they should not replace a thorough medical and cultural history from the patient and collateral information from family and friends. Develop insight into how we developed self-limiting beliefs as a way to stay close to a parent, however painful or problematic that attachment has been.
