Although human rights and civil liberties are upheld at least on paper there are no objective standards of right or wrong, good or evil, beauty or ugliness. The Maulana thought that true Islam was never firmly rooted in India and castigated in his writings the Muslim kings for their failure to send out professional missionaries to conduct a massive propaganda campaign to evangelize the countryside and convert all the Hindus to Islam. There is an urgent need to apply these principles but in a modern context to bring our cities back to the Islamic life.
