Trump's impeachment trial shows why Presidents Day should only honor Washington

Long-time Trump ally Lindsey Graham says history will judge the former's president's responsibility for the siege — but he won't vote for impeachment. Be the first to hear about important news stories with these occasional emails. But since there is a continuing body, the committees nominally remain under control until a new organizing resolution passes.

Minimum wage a negotiable number And there is plenty of room for compromise because there are facts to be argued on both sides.

Trump impeachment sets stage for politically perilous Senate trail

Donald Trump's next chapter is unclear, but Republicans appear to be waiting to see how much influence he continues to wield over the party he once led. Democrats say this trial should go quicker, and they played down the need for evidence, since the senators themselves were witnesses to the conduct. He advocates losing strategies purely to further his own career at the expense of the party.

Senate power

The surprise vote on witnesses shook Washington and seemed to even catch senators off guard. Recent minority leaders have included Andria Tupola, a former candidate for governor now serving on the nonpartisan Honolulu City Council, and Beth Fukumoto, who was notably by McDermott after opposing Donald Trump in 2016.
