

Life sentence - your questions answered.

Home Office - 3 Ways to Get Early Release from Prison

COMPETITIVE CONVERSATIONS
WHEN YOU'RE ASKING	WHEN YOU'RE ANSWERING
CHALLENGE Your conversational partner is reluctant to share information and may even lie.	CHALLENGE Answering questions could put you at a strategic disadvantage.
TACTICS Ask direct or "yes or no" questions to avoid evasive answers. Ask detailed follow-up questions (even if they're redundant) to pry out more information. Frame tough questions using unrealistic assumptions ("We've experienced some headwinds in sales, right?") to reduce the likelihood that respondents will lie. Ask the most sensitive question first. Subsequent questions will feel less intrusive, making your partner more forthcoming.	TACTICS Prepare. Think in advance about the information you want to keep private (to avoid answering impulsively). Judge the issue by answering a similar question you'd prefer to have been asked. Deflect and gain control of the conversation by posing a question in return. Consider when to share negative information—rather than refusing to answer—to build trust.
COOPERATIVE CONVERSATIONS
WHEN YOU'RE ASKING	WHEN YOU'RE ANSWERING
CHALLENGE Friendly colleagues may shy away from conflict or hesitate to share bad news.	CHALLENGE We forget to focus on making conversations productive and delightful, or we speak too freely.
TACTICS Ask open-ended questions ("If you were to play devil's advocate, what would you say?") to draw out negative feedback. Begin with the least sensitive questions to build rapport, and escalate slowly. Ask in competitive contexts. Frame tough questions using negative assumptions.	TACTICS Avoid drifting on and on. Use energy, humor, and storytelling to engage your partners. Avoid talking too much about yourself, and remember to ask questions of others. Deflect tough questions by answering with another question or a joke.
