Meanwhile, another contender for the throne had emerged — , son of and a grandson of Æthelred II, returned to England in 1057, and although he died shortly after his return, he brought with him his family, which included two daughters, and , and a son,. Before this, William had returned to the continent, where Ralph had continued the rebellion from Brittany. He also retained control of much of the lands of Harold and his family, which made the king the largest secular landowner in England by a wide margin.
