Anthology British Cups by Michael Berthoud

A mixed bag and - sad to say - slightly disappointing for this reader. Our narrator, the makeup artist, does so too until the Hafiz she is applying makeup on, who was fired from the show they are watching, reminds her to focus on her own self and remember that a veil might be placed or might have already been placed on our heart. There were several works which I quite liked, in no particular order: 'The Girl Next Door' by Kamila Shamise; 'Blood and Broken Bodies' by Shaista Aziz - about so called 'honour killings', couldn't agree more with the views expressed; 'Uomini Cardanno' - a poem by 14 year old Seema Begun - super inspiring; 'Mezzaterra' - an interesting essay by London-resident Egyptian journalist Ahdaf Soueif berating the western society for not being well informed about the Middle East but I do agree with her view of Israel the geopolitical entity; 'Islamic Tinder' - an essay by Triska Hamid which talks about successful women not being able to find a muslim partner on their level, which reminds me of exceptionally good Bulgarian non religious christian women staying single well into their mid-30s for lack of good enough Bulgarian men to match them; 'Belongings' - a very touching poem by Asma Elbadawi; 'Battlefield' - a play by Sabrina Mahfouz.

I tried again and just couldn't go past 30%, and as this year is coming to an end I decided to give it one last try and I REALLY WANTED TO LIKE THIS BOOK BUT I DON'T, I couldn't relate to any parts of it at all which is super weird because I am Muslim and I am a woman.
