Opening Doors: How Selective Colleges and Universities Are Expanding Access for High

There is no GPA or test score cut-off for the scholarship; rather, staff review applications holistically, looking for high character, high academic achievement, and leadership potential. The wish list is long—and goes deep into the weeds of the law.

Admissions Specialist/Advisor

Ensures new students schedule appointments with College Advisors and Financial Aid. The impending reauthorization of ESEA has taken the process a step further: 37 states have agreed to the Common Core standards for curricula to ensure they will qualify for future federal funding. The amount of merit aid awarded to students from higher-income families has doubled since the mid-1990s and now exceeds the amount of funding provided in need-based aid.

Head Count

We watch the stock market, compare salaries, and scrutinize batting averages. They frequently attend high schools that are focused primarily on bringing students up to proficiency rather than on challenging advanced students.

Opening Doors: How Selective Colleges and Universities Are Expanding Access for High

This is usually either the SAT or the ACT. Pomona has developed recruitment and admissions strategies to address the specific needs of underrepresented students. We not only know which children will drop out of school, we know which schools they attend.
