Theory and research in social education

It would be something for me to tell my neighbors in the country in the dull days which make conversation delightful, even though it may not be of the best quality, that, on the 13th day of July, 1865, I had been one of the crowded concourse that witnessed the destruction of Barnum's Museum, and had narrowly escaped with my life, in the manner already described. History is replete with the records of martyrdom in the interest of advancement of the truth.
