Romans in Britain

But most people in southern Britain settled down to Roman order and discipline.

Ancient Roman street maps of Britain reveal what YOUR town looked like 1,900 years ago

The forum was used for political gatherings and also for a wide range of activities such as markets with the customary traders plying their wares. The Wall of Antoninus, or Graham's Dyke perhaps from C. Brocolitia are earthworks and a small Temple of Mithras.

Library

In addition merchants and soldiers introduced oriental cults, among them Christianity. On this page you can see some reconstructions and maps of Roman towns in Britain and elsewhere.

Library

The title of Emperor was assumed by Maximus in 383, but he was put to death in 388. Considering that most of these have a military appearance to them leads us to believe that the architects used had their origins in designing forts and army buildings. This had the resultant effect of making their properties appear lower than when they had originally been built.

List of cities founded by the Romans

Roman towns, with their impressive public buildings on a scale not seen before in Britain, must have had a great impact on the native population. Many Roman remains were recovered and are preserved at his seat, Audley End—one of the finest examples of Jacobean architecture now remaining in England. Streets crossed each other and made lots of blocks known as 'insulae'.
