U.S. Public Schools Are Not Failing. They're Among The Best In The World

Cold winters, grade point averages, and the English language were all equally alien to him.

The thing most White Nationalists are upset about are either A exaggerated because no actual data supports their claim, or B a mask for what truly upsets them, we have to see more non-whites in the neighborhood or at work. Fair argument, but I don't think there's any inherent requirement for the problems they're facing to be directly correlated to race.

Yes, there is one other reason I could think of in response to your last question about failure: the absence of a specialization-related College Entry Exam; it should be required and designed by each college. That said - all of this is just dancing around your core issue, so I'll address that head on: But a white politician that advocates for fellow white people? Instead of focusing on students as earners, we really need to value them as learners so that we can encourage them to finish their high school education.
