No Less Than Victory

Shaara was born into a family of Italian immigrants in New Brunswick, New Jersey. The plane shimmied sideways, and he rocked with it, felt the nose go up, could see the ground falling away, the B-17 climbing higher, steeper. Fast moving insight into the last year of the war in Europe, which brings to life the personalities of the main commanders and also the lives and tribulations of a selected number of real individual soldiers.

You'll think you are right along side these guys. They had stared curiously at the French and Belgian countryside, returning the smiles of the people who greeted them at every stop, and few noticed that as the trains moved farther inland, closer to the vast desolation of the Western Front, the villagers were quieter, the faces more grim. Close enough that the sergeant is afraid? Shaara's real-life figures generals Dwight D.
