Terence: Hecyra and Phormio

For all of us know who have met with trouble from any cause, that all the time that passes before we come to the knowledge of it, is so much gain. May the Gods and Goddesses confound you, Laches, for vexing him so! There is a class of men who strive to be the first in every thing, but are not; to these I make my court; I do not present myself to them to be laughed at; but I am the first to laugh with them, and at the same time to admire their parts: whatever they say, I commend; if they contradict that self-same thing, I commend again. You will say it was her fault.

The Comedies

In the first place, he has now found out about this amour; with hostile feelings he watches me, lest I should be devising some trickery against the marriage. Now, when she sees that preparations are being made for the wedding at our house, the maid-servant is directly sent to fetch the midwife to her, and to bring a child at the same time.

P. Terentius Afer (Terence), Phormio, or The Scheming Parasite, act prologue, scene 0

What, am I to believe you, you scoundrel? This implies finality in nature.
