Sexual Assault Center

Although open discussion of the realities of sexual assault and domestic violence were limited at these times, activists for equal rights began to challenge the status quo. A plea for help and volunteers went out to the community.

Not sure where to start?

Support survivors and educate yourself and others about sexual assault.

History of the Movement

The needs of women of color, rural women, poor women, prostituted women, immigrant women, women with new ideas; the needs of women who are doubly marginalized one way or another, are too often pushed to the back burner in the current rape crisis centers and domestic violence shelters.
