In the final stages of the war the division's GSO1 effectively was acting Lieutenant Colonel. Once I started I realised that this was going to be a difficult and time consuming task, so I decided I would ask for help from forum pals with a similar interest. Read the full review Firetrench There are a growing number of books from specialist publisher Pen and Sword celebrating the Great War in various ways - postcards are a particular favourite in dealers' shops and at car boot sales and in charity shops, and author Michael Young's specialism is postcards of the ASC from the turn of the century until the end of the Great War.

47th (1/2nd London) Division

During 1915 the WO began to form new RGA siege batteries based on from TF coast defence units.

ASC Service numbers

It was converted into a two-brigade motorised division in 1938 as 1st London Motor Division, under Major-General , the first TA officer appointed to command a division. Collector Bookstore is a retailer of new books located in Leavenworth, Kansas.

Army Service Corps 1902 1918

A very popular practical wargaming series. This book contains an impressive collection of the picture postcards send home by members of this unit, with some officially produced images but a much larger number of cards based on privately taken photographs.
