Kankoku waga kokoro no furusato (1984 edition)

The festival is quite something to see, where 1000 young women dress in yukata cotton summer kimonos and wear specially crafted paper lanterns worn on the head. There is a central stage high above the crowd where a few young women lead the dance of 1000 lantern-bearing women with lit head dress in a dance in circles around the stage, accompanied by folk singing and instruments.

How do you put one of these things up? How often do you see a deaf person in conversation with a blind person? The rope attached to a large round bell is there for the supplicants also.

Kokoro no Furusato — Where Japanese regions and the Japanese heart meet

Flower buttons are Tsumami-zaiku crafted by Aunt Honami Nakashima, master level kimono-maker; Note also how the traditional and modern are blended together in all these family photos on this page. A few years ago my sister Fumi's daughter Ai was chosen as a lead dancer for the center stage and featured in the posters and literature advertising that year's Toro Matsuri.
