UT College of Liberal Arts:

Moulton will fill several positions at LSU. Because the experience of citizenship is still biased by gender and racial relations in Latin America, the course brings into attention historiographical contributions to discuss aspects of the separation of male and female social roles in the political systems under these lenses too.

We will have the opportunity to collaborate with another civil rights class. The early modern centuries between about 1500 and 1800 were years of tremendous change in many ways — including religious reformations, more powerful governments, the domestic impacts of colonialism that included the forced migration of people of African descent to Europe and involvement with slavery in many indirect forms, and the economic transformation we call the transition to capitalism. Students will examine cultural, religious, and migratory trends that have shaped Jews in the western hemisphere and in the United States in particular.
