HIV/AIDS Prevention and Treatment

Care-related household and community-level interventions include school feeding with special take-home rations for families caring for orphans, food for training programs that promote income-generating activities, and food for work to support homestead production activities. This research includes work on HIV infection and vaccine models for its prevention, and studies of the immune response to HIV, as well as conducting, planning or consulting on epidemiology studies of the role devices or radiation play in the transmission, prevention, detection, or treatment of HIV infection and closely associated conditions.

HIV and AIDS:

Serve foods that are easy to swallow like eggs, ice cream, cooked vegetables.

Data on infectivity by transmission mode are shown in. Obviously one issue is the acceptability of such a procedure as well as the fact that some increase in high risk sexual activity was noted among the men who were circumcised, although this did not offset the results of the intervention. The ability of care providers to detect incipient toxicity at an early stage also influences the magnitude of side effects and toxicities.

Priorities

In addition, contextual factors, such as government acceptance of needle exchange programs, incarceration of drug users, and harassment of sex workers, will likely have a major impact on the effectiveness of prevention efforts.
