Interview with NVA General Tran Van Tra

This was the essential, inescapable, tragic dilemma for America in Vietnam: it could not manage to stay out; but it could never manage to win. .

Moïse's Bibliography: The ARVN and the RVN

In addition to the flight of refugees, the end of the war and institution of new rules by the communists contributed to a decline in the population of the city.

I will tell just one story.

Interview with NVA General Tran Van Tra

The Tet offensive should be reviewed especially for those younger than 35 as this group consists of more than 50 per cent of the population and knows very little about what happened outside of the partial information recorded by American and Communist media. From a military tactical viewpoint, the offensive was a complete failure. American sources also provide information on the battle, its aftermath and consequences Dawson 1977, 233-236, 237-240, 257-258, 267-268, 284-285, 301-302; Todd 1990, 254-256; Tucker 1999, 185-187.

But approximately fifty thousand more remained trapped in a rapidly shrinking pocket, defended by troops whose morale was failing.

What happened in the Tet Offensive's first 36 hours

Tra, at 72, looked remarkably fit and was cooperative and at ease throughout the interview.

Ngo Van, the Vietnamese revolutionary who bridged generations

Most of the 150 Communist civilian cadres operating within the city were local, that is from the Thua Thien province area.
