Frisch, Max (Rudolf)

There were numerous short sketches and essays along with three novels or longer narratives, 1934 , it's belated sequel I adore that which burns me 1944 and the narrative Antwort aus der Stille 1937. The way actor Maja Beckmann develops this, the way Leonie Böhm arranges it in images, the way Johannes Rieder reflects it in music — is breath-taking and intelligent.

In during the 1980s Frisch's prose works and plays also ran through many editions, although here they were not the focus of so much intensive literary commentary. In 1950 Frisch switched publishers again, this time to the arguably more mainstream then being established in by. The diary became a very characteristic prose form for Frisch.

Frisch, Max (Rudolf)

You provide statements that can never contain actual experience: experience itself remains beyond the reach of language. Apart from a few early works, most of Frisch's books and plays have been translated into around ten languages.
