about — Mark Cazalet

In 1927, the artist moved into a studio with his brother, Diego, his lifelong companion and assistant, and exhibited his sculpture for the first time at the Salon des Tuileries, Paris. Buildings such as the Berman House, Australia Square, Hong Kong Club and Wohnpark Neue Donau are well documented, but it is the stories of artistic collaboration that are the prism through which exhibition curator Vladimir Belogolovsky has looked. He trained at Chelsea School of Art and then Falmouth School of Art for Degree level.

Master Prints & Multiples — Nikola Rukaj Gallery

Seidler would explain that Le Corbusier's 1920s modern architecture had columns placed 6 metres apart, whereas by mid-1980s pre-stressed concrete technology allowed 34 metre column-free space, resulting in different visual expression and openness in architecture. Harry Seidler: Architecture, Art and Collaborative Design

In the mid-1920s Braque designed the decor for two Sergei Diaghilev ballets.
