VERDAD

Third, a population facing maladaptation in the altered conditions may migrate or move to a different location where the conditions are similar to those preceding the environmental change. Each MCMC sample was based on a run of 40,000,000 generations, sampled every 4,000, with the first 4,000,000 generations discarded as burn-in. A central dimension of contrast is that Australia as a 'settled' continent has had wholesale dispossession of Aboriginal land, while in Papua New Guinea more than 95% of the land surface remains unalienated from customary ownership.
