Andrew Brown Jr. video: Family to sue deputies, sheriff in shooting

Bodycams haven't lived up to promises of exposing police misconduct. Ortiz and Kevin McCoy, USA TODAY; The Associated Press Contact News NOW Reporter Christine Fernando at or follow her on Twitter at. In a statement Tuesday, family attorneys criticized Womble's decision to not pursue criminal charges against the deputies.

A deputy is shown near the front of the car before he pulls slightly away when Brown drives forward. Lynch said the family viewed about 18 minutes of video and that he had trouble determining who was doing what because the faces of the deputies were blurred. He emphasized the deputies did not shoot until after Brown's car moved, and the videos seem to confirm that, although Brown appears to try to avoid the deputies.

Before that announcement, one man climbed on top of a police vehicle and was arrested when he got down. Cars snaked around the corners behind the crowd to follow the protesters — with some people sticking signs through their sunroofs to show their support. But Tuesday, he played clips during the news conference for the first time publicly.
