Table 1 The Community School Pillars Correspond With Characteristics of High-Quality Schools
Pillars of Community Schools	Characteristics of High-Quality Schools
Intergenerational support: Partnerships of school leaders to learning through partnerships with social and health service agencies and providers, ideally coordinated by a dedicated professional staff member. Some employ social-emotional learning, conflict resolution training, trauma-informed care, and restorative justice practices to support mental health and lessen conflict, building, and positive disciplinary actions, such as suspensions.	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>Attention to all aspects of child development: academic, social, emotional, physical, psychological, and moral</li> <li>Extra academic, social, and health and wellness support for students, as needed</li> <li>Climate of safety and trusting relationships</li> <li>Learning is the top priority</li> <li>High expectations and strong support for all students</li> <li>Sufficient resources and opportunities for meaningful learning</li> <li>Strong school, family, and community ties, including opportunities for shared leadership</li> <li>Climate of safety and trusting relationships</li> </ul>
Expanded learning time and opportunities, including after-school, weekend, and summer programs, provide additional academic support, individualized academic support, enrichment activities, and learning opportunities that emphasize real-world learning and community problem solving.
Family and community engagement: Brings parents and other community members into the school as partners with shared decision-making power in children's education. Such engagement also means that families have access to information about the educational opportunities they want, such as ESL classes, grief care or citizenship preparation, computer skills, art, STEM, etc.
Collaborative leadership and practice: build a culture of professional learning, collective trust, and shared responsibility within the school as well as between the school and its partners.
