Context matters: the experience of 14 research teams in systematically reporting contextual factors important for practice change. Neither the proposed nor final rates offered by any individual issuer provide a reliable basis for predicting what typical Marketplace consumers will pay in the following year. The report documents what was already widely known—insurer participation in the exchanges is down for 2018 from 2017 and premiums, particularly the benchmark silver plan premiums, are up dramatically.

However, shopping for insurance can still be challenging. Patient characteristics such as ethnicity, age, metabolic risk factors, smoking status, and chronic disease burden, as well as psychosocial issues, such as availability of caregiver support, help practices and payors identify individuals and populations that might benefit from CM services. Although basic processes of care coordination should be an integral part of routine primary care, specific care coordination requirements vary among populations and among individuals.

Mental Health and Substance Use Disorders

In concert with these health policy goals involving alignment of CM services with population needs, research is needed regarding the development and implementation of CM services across the medical neighborhood, including the spectrum of long-term care services and supports.

Mental Health and Substance Use Disorders

For example, clinical pharmacists receive extensive training in conducting medication reconciliation, while social workers are well positioned to assess psychosocial needs and connect patients with community resources. In 2010, AHRQ funded 14 Transforming Primary Care grants and supported four additional Delivery System Research grants through American Recovery and Reinvestment Act funding.
