Prospective investigation of risk factors for prostate cancer in the UK Biobank cohort study

While there is limited epidemiological evidence for other lifestyle risk factors for prostate cancer , the relatively high variation in incidence rates worldwide suggests that differences in exposure to environmental factors may have a role in prostate cancer development, although some of the variation is due to differences between countries in prostate-specific antigen PSA testing. It is possible that some of the regional differences might be due to differences in detection rates of asymptomatic prostate cancer.
