Henri Brémont

Chantal outlived her son who died fighting Huguenots and English on the during the century's religious wars and two of her three daughters, but left extensive correspondence. Whether we seek life in a religious order or, like Jane, answer the call to family life, those three priorities can be incorporated into our daily twenty-first-century living. This voluntaristic anthropology places the itinerary of the will at the center of the moral and spiritual journey of the human subject.
