Stephen Wade, In My Own Shire

Region and Belonging in British Writing, 1840

Even in 1750, the sole language of parish church services in over 80 per cent of Wales was Welsh and we can assume that English-speaking landowners in some parts may have imposed English on a predominantly Welsh-speaking flock Davies 1993: 34; cf.

I have always been rational with my contributions and the basis of your criticisms of me are foolish, unreasonable and unfair. The official policy on states that there are legitimate uses for multiple accounts, it is only for certain purposes that sockpuppets are banned, for example multiple voting. Because I am certain if it were a bona fide survey, then at least one if not several more of the respondents would have replied that Wales is the land of RUGBY but as Mrs.

The precedent has already been established by the local governments and administration. Is this your good faith in action? What do you think about including this title into the article? I don't think either is. George Borrow, then, was wandering in a place newly promoted as a land of bards and singers.

D'habitude, c'est des cours de violon. The use of Alba Scotland is a somewhat different case again, however, as Scots Gaelic is more a Highland than a Scottish language - it's never had much currency in Lowland Scotland whereas Welsh, as we know, spread at one point even beyond what we now call Wales - So the English or Scots form has a greater historical claim to being the native form there.
