NIMH » Blueprint for Change: Research on Child and Adolescent Mental Health

All these efforts, ranging from White House conferences and Surgeon General reports to private foundation publications, have arrived at the same conclusion: Findings from research in neurobiology, genetics, behavioral science, and social science have led to an increased understanding of the complex interactions among genetic and socioenvironmental factors and their contribution to child and adolescent mental disorders. In the course of reviewing the West Carroll Parish school district's compliance with its desegregation orders, the Section identified zone jumping within the district and student transfers from outside of the district. § 1983; and 3 whether MHSAA's scheduling of only girls' sports in disadvantageous seasons violated Title IX and the Equal Protection Clause.

Case Summaries

A growing number of linkage studies of families with emotional disorders and breeding studies of animals also make it clear that the genetic makeup of an individual will play a role in the behavioral and cognitive outcome of nongenetic effects on brain development.

NIMH » Blueprint for Change: Research on Child and Adolescent Mental Health

In violation of Title IV of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the District failed to investigate the alleged harassment and retaliation adequately, address it effectively, and prevent it from recurring.

The San Diego Union

Among white, black, Hispanic, and other youth, Hispanics are the least likely of all groups to access specialty care 5 percent , even though they and black children have the highest rates of need 10. Yet, understanding intervention approaches developed in the field is important, as such approaches often reflect the needs of children and families and the constraints of personnel, as well as organizational and system limitations. This model creates an illusion that science-based treatments are not meant to be used or usable.
