Chant accompaniment

You're right that it resembles organum, but it's not the melody replicated below at a constant interval. For instance, he is completely in the dark when it comes to Vollaerts. It has one melody monodic.

Gregorian Chant was taken to England by Augustine in 597. If one has to live with accompaniment, and even dare I say? I heard some beautiful ones. Anglican chant uses a harmonized melody without intonation for singing unmetered texts such as psalms and canticles.

Ubi caritas (Gregorian chant)

Almost his entire book is based on a 19th century edition of chant. This example of a pre-Solemn chant accompaniment contributed to a dislike of chant and would be unthinkable nowadays! These are still the official editions of the Roman Catholic Church, unchanged since their publication. One way to help singers work toward a goodison is to have them start by singing the words on the drone notes.
