Christie's London Catalogues

For all these reasons, I am persuaded that the judge's finding that Christie's were in breach of their duty to Ms Thomson cannot stand upon the reasons which the judge himself gave. This results in no loss, since, on the judge's finding, they should have been described as they were described and the facts relied on by the judge did not affect their value.

La

None of the matters relied on by the judge were shown to have been material to Ms Thomson's decision to bid.

JHRB

However, other sources note that James Christie rented auction rooms from 1762, and newspaper advertisements for Christie's sales dating from 1759 have also been traced.

A REGENCY BRASS LINE

Christie's, the first defendants, held an important auction sale in London on 8th December 1994. The metallurgical evidence was simply a factor which the judge had taken into account in his assessment of the vases' likely date.
