How the ITU Maritime Manual helps mariners navigate the complex world of radiocommunication

Some repair procedures in this Mariner outboard downloadable manual may require the use of special tools. Since these requirements are established in regulation, changing them would require a rulemaking and is beyond the scope of this policy document.

SAR Marine User's Manual

Three commenters opined that it is excessive to require mariners to undergo a medical examination every two years. They requested that the Coast Guard provide additional language in the Medical Manual to clarify that applicants need only disclose OTC medications, when such medications were used for a period of 30 days or more within the 90 days prior to the date the applicant signs the application to the Coast Guard.

The IAMSAR Manual in Nutshell

Medications Two comment letters noticed discrepancies in the language in Chapter 7 related to required disclosures of over-the-counter OTC medications. This commenter expressed concerns that the guidance in the Medical Manual would sacrifice maritime safety unless the Coast Guard provided further clarification and a plan for implementation.

The Coast Guard considered each of these recommendations, but noted that changes to the regulations are beyond the scope of this policy document. While the Coast Guard is not required to seek or respond to public comments prior to publication of a policy document, we chose to do so in this case because of the perceived complexity of the Merchant Mariner Medical Manual, and because doing so provides us the opportunity to 1 create a guidance document that is more viable and responsive to the needs of the impacted community; and 2 to identify and clarify remaining areas of confusion and concern amongst the regulated community.

Unsupported browsers; such as Chrome, Firefox or Safari, may erroneously say credentials are invalid or display an incompatibility warning. Three commenters asked whether employers have an obligation to report to the Coast Guard information regarding a change in condition. Such an evaluation might be requested when the employer has a reasonable belief that an employee will not be able to perform essential job functions because of their medical condition.
