With the approval being given for the port expansion , is there any kick back for cruising? As the previous posted said, it's a coal loading facility so no cruise ships. The Hay Point and Dalrymple coal terminals make up a large compound and are a good 40 minutes out of Mackay to the south. Our study highlights the lack of available monitoring data for most of these CECs, and recommends: i the inclusion of all relevant environmental data into integrated databases for building marine baselines for the GBR and TS regions, and ii the implementation of local, targeted monitoring programs informed by predictive methods for risk prioritization.

Will Abbot Point boost cruising in Queensland?

Current and projected agricultural, urban and industrial developments are likely to increase the sources and diversity of CECs being released into these marine ecosystems.

Sources, presence and potential effects of contaminants of emerging concern in the marine environments of the Great Barrier Reef and Torres Strait, Australia

There is nothing there for tourists to see and since it's only a hour from Airlie, I doubt cruise ships would ever stop there.

I'm pleased it was a great trip. It was just past the bridge on the southern side. Also, while the port extension has been approved, the QLD govt has withdrawn funding so unless the private interests involved can raise the money, it won't be built and that seems the obvious conclusion discussed around here.

The locals try their utmost to make the stay as pleasant as possible but I am very pleased I wont have to go back there To be honest, Bowen is a blimp on the map. Port Headland in WA , was never intended for cruise ships, but is being used by them. I always thought they docked at the Harbour but that is sugar, not coal.
