Tran is a member and past president of the Religious Education Association: Association of Professors, Practitioners, and Researchers in Religious Education. If the problem relates to finances and demographics, flowing from the historically rural nature of the church in its frontier origins, who or what authority can shift church planting from congregations located at buggy distance to modern urban realities? How does one identify a stakeholder where structural issues are concerned? She speaks for herself and for her community, the people of God throughout time. The fact that all the other problems are sucking energy and attention into their particular set of grievances reinforces the deepest problem of all, a church that has lost its way.

Shepastor: to Encourage and Equip

Competition is an attitude that flows through various levels of the United Methodist wicked problem.

Through the Front Doors: Methodist Women's Journey Toward Ordination

Who are we as the members of the Baltimore-Washington Conference? You are right — this is not the end of the fight; it will go on.

No matter what, there is a place for each one of us in this study together. Let us be mindful that women must still enlarge their understanding of power and expand their vision with the confidence that they can always take on more. Noren is professor of preaching at North Park Theological Seminary in Chicago.
