Marx and socialism: A critical evaluation

Such an attitude of subjectivism in regard to earlier civilizations should make no appeal to the scientific mind.

Lenin: Frederick Engels

Here, in Rhenish Prussia, they took charge of the democratic Neue Rheinische Zeitung published in Cologne. The Muqaddimah Princeton University Press, 2019.

Full Marx: Is Marxism scientific

Just as it is impossible to separate program from strategy, and both from tactics, so it is impossible to divide the philosophical from the political and economic, or the method from the data. It abolishes property, the basis of the modern social order, it itself strives towards the very aim which the socialists have set themselves. Theoretically, the exclusion of the subjectivity of the theorist is an impossibility: the theorist, whether Marx, Engels, Lenin or Mao, cannot look at society from outside, cannot stand on the moon.

Beyond this, they hold that all phenomena — including consciousness — are ultimately the outcome of though not reducible to material processes and that humans can, in principle, understand that world — often incorrectly and never completely, but that over time we can collectively work towards a better knowledge of what reality is and how it functions. The answer is mainly yes but partly no. We may remark here that two historical prerequisites were necessary to the genesis of capital—first, the accumulation of a considerable sum of money in the hands of individuals living under conditions in which there was a comparatively high development of commodity production; and second, the existence of workers who were free in a double sense of the term, free to sell their labor power everywhere that is, free from serfdom and slavery , and free from property so that they were compelled to sell their labor power in order to exist.
