How to make a wind harp

That is, having drawn one as tight as you think best, draw the others, one at a time, till they give forth the same musical note when snapped with the linger. In this poem, Coleridge anticipates his marriage with Sara Fricker.

The metaphor was itself rendered material in many of the period's fashionable parlors, in wooden and gut-string harps, placed in window casements and played upon by the wind. This is a kind of musical instrument, which gives a musical sound when the wind blows across its strings. Fasten them tightly and put two bridges under them of sufficient height so that the strain comes on the bridges, then screw up the eyes until you have sufficient tension; the tighter the strings the higher the note; they may be of various tensions or tuned to one note.

26Footless and wild, like birds of Paradise, 27Nor pause, nor perch, hovering on untamed wing! The words are listed in the order in which they appear in the poem Unintentional Wind Harps Singing Telephone Wires In the 1940s Source: Don Bell Did you know that Aeolian wind harps can be unintentionally created by transmission lines, guide wires, telephone poles, and wire-strung fences? Across the top, near each end, glue a strip of wood half an inch high and a quarter of an inch thick, for bridges.
