All the major churches saw it as their prerogative and were alarmed by the intrusion of the state into their sphere of influence. In 1843 Turner received a reply from a group of students at Andover Seminary. The question of educational provision has brought the church and state into conflict on numerous occasions and at times even had the power to threaten the stability of the Northern Irish government.

Religion and Society in Nineteenth

In twentieth-century Ireland religion has a political and social influence, among both Catholics and Protestants, that is unequalled anywhere in Western Europe. This also meant that teachers were less results driven and could expand the curriculum.
