Transcontinental Motor Convoy

Horace Hamilton Minkler, track foreman for the Central Pacific, laid the last rail and tie before the Last Spike was driven. This is a collection of essays about a year long trip through America in the mid 1950s.

Wagon train

Elevated 6,070 feet 1,850 m above sea level, and sitting on the new Union Pacific route with a connection to Denver, Cheyenne was chosen to become a major railroad center and was equipped with extensive railroad yards, maintenance facilities, and a Union Pacific presence. Although certainly not gourmet, food on Amtrak's long distance trains hits the spot.
