Comparative Criminal Law and Enforcement: Russia

It is self-evident that such an aim was also served by all codes of bourgeois law, as systems of norms rules, formulae of organized force to establish a stability of interests among social classes designed to serve the ruling classes the bourgeoisie and the landowners. Their punishment shall depend not upon the degree of their participation, but upon the degree of danger represented by the criminal and the act committed.

Article 58 (RSFSR Penal Code)

It is also remarkable that libel and criminal insult were criminalized as early as in 1922.

First Soviet Criminal Code

We are taught by the everyday experience of the family, the school, associations of men and women, and the history of social life, that in order to lessen the danger of outbreaks of passion it is more useful to take them in their origin, and in flank, than to meet them when they have gathered force. Police give other inmates in the pretrial detention facilities special privileges to beat, rape, or otherwise force suspects into confessing.

Soviet Administration of Criminal Law on JSTOR

But where state security is involved, in the Soviet or any other absolute dictatorship, human rights are suppressed or obliterated to the degree believed to be required by security interests. .

Comparative Criminal Law and Enforcement: Russia

The appellate courts may also reverse a lower court judgment on grounds not pleaded by the parties. However, from the point of view of criminal justice systems, we do not think that it is, for reasons that we shall make clear shortly.
