HMSO - 17 Ideas for Congress' Budget Reform Committee

The central and local government (Treasury) Committee has put together the following compilation of 17 ideas to assist councils with an understanding of the proposed reforms and to help them to decide what action they need to take to support the reform process.

4. Why are central and local government working together on this programme and why is this the best approach to take?

- A joint approach will allow central and local government to define the important aspects of both parts to guide the proposed reforms.
- An initial allocation of funding will be made available upon signing of a MoU that commits parties to work together on the reforms programme. This initial allocation will be used to support the delivery of the programme, maintaining job and investment in water infrastructure renewals in the central and local government sectors.
- Additional funding will be subject to Government decision making and reliant on the success of the programme and its ability to deliver the agreed objectives. The amount, timing, conditions and any other information relating to this funding will be determined by the Treasury and the Committee.

5. What are the key features the Government is expecting from future reformed services?

- The first phase of the programme will involve central and local government working together to develop the proposed new service delivery arrangements and operating models.
- The initial focus of phase one is on drinking water and wastewater assets and services. Other assets and services may be included in phase one where appropriate, as part of the reform programme.
- Involvement of local government in new service delivery arrangements, such as multi-regional entities, which can achieve the benefits of scale, and reflect the needs and well-being of local communities.
- Local government would be responsible for the day-to-day running of water entities. Water entities would also likely be governed by competency-based boards.
- There would be a clear distinction between the roles of local government and the new water entities in order to deliver independence of control.
- The new entities must be publicly owned – with no references for privatisation or partnership in the future.
- Governance of the new entities will be based on the model set out above for consideration of the needs and well-being of local communities.
- All assets and services will be included in the new entities, unless otherwise agreed by the Treasury.
- The new entities will be statutory entities (i.e. designed and established by legislation).

Budget Reform Committee

Obviously, we would love to see it happen no later than 2030, but our best understanding was that was the date by which the government itself thought that could be done. When the House is not sitting committees hold public hearings, meetings, inspections and other activities around Australia. The benefits of this approach are clear: important, unbiased research has undergirded policies that have improved the lives of Americans, making our air and water cleaner, saving lives on the roads and in the sky, and leading to the development of life-saving drugs.

Reforming the Standing Orders of the House of Commons

Reports by joint committees are dealt with in the same manner as the reports of House or Senate committees except that joint committee reports are directed to, and presented in, both Houses. Department of the Interior Office of the Inspector General, Allegations Against Julie MacDonald; National Aeronautics and Space Administration Office of the Inspector General, Allegations That NASA Suppressed Climate Change Science. In order for them to do what you're talking about, I think our recommendations actually speak to the very problems you're raising in terms of more research capacity, more data-gathering powers, being more proactive, getting more regular reporting, and then being able to have the enforcement powers if there are breaches, which you can only know if you actually have the information and the capacity to monitor and evaluate as you go along.

The Business of Ways and Means

Committees provide a public forum for the presentation of the various views of individual citizens and interest groups. It encourages more government spending by default.
