Denial of Fair Public Trial The law provides for an independent judiciary, and the government respected judicial independence and impartiality.

Northern Ireland

If a plebiscite or other means of determining the wishes of the people of Northern Ireland shows that they wish to remain within the United Kingdom then the question does not arise unless and until a further expression of view shows a different result; but if a desire for unity were to be made manifest at the first plebiscite there is a general recognition that a lengthy process of discussion and negotiation would inevitably follow.

The decision was subsequently challenged by the Court of Appeal in Northern Ireland.
