River Dee, Aberdeenshire

With all the fuss about the current royal family, you can lose sight of the long connection Royal Deeside had with Scottish royalty pre-dating the unification of the Kingdom of England and Wales with the Kingdom of Scotland in 1801. Turns out Queen Victoria knew that feeling too. Prior to the visit, Aberdeenshire was something of an enigma to me.

Scotland

Things changed last night though, and I awoke this morning to heavy rain falling on the roof of my accommodation. This means that I will be enjoying a full English or probably Scottish breakfast each morning during my stay here — yay! Thanks for reading my blog. The lodge can comfortably accommodate up to twenty guests across ten, luxury bedrooms, each of the bedrooms boast their own en-suite bathrooms making it a practical choice for a group of couples.

Crathes Castle is just twenty-five minutes away, here there is a Go Ape, a fun high ropes course with daring crossings and exhilarating zipwires, a must visit for those without a fear of heights! Legend has it that the cave behind the waterfall was a hiding place for Scottish hero and outlaw Rob Roy MacGregor, but in actual fact it was a hideout for another 17th century outlaw, Patrick Gilderoy MacGregor, a possible relative of Rob Roy. Before reaching the North Sea, the river passes through Aberdeen Harbour, the principal marine centre for the energy industry in Europe, servicing the.

Curious about why people the Royal Family included continue to fall in love with this unique Scottish region? The line was not extended beyond Ballater to Braemar as this would require running close to Balmoral, leading to objections from Queen Victoria. Though the boundaries are difficult to quantify, Royal Deeside is generally the area surrounding the River Dee as it flows from its source in the Cairngorms down to the sea in Aberdeen.
